The collection was started by me as a reflection. It was easy to compile because every day there are mistakes being created, and mistakes in the decisions we make. Its those mistakes that are created everyday that I want to compile into a collection. The point is to learn from these mistakes, I want to be able to accept my failures so I can continue to learn, and grow from them.

These occurrences are a collection because, they are all relating, and they happen all for one concept in life. To learn from them. This collection is completely subjective because what others might not consider failures in everyday life, I would, and vise-versa. Finding common ground on what is a failure in life is not the point of this collection, the point is embracing the failure and creating room to grow and succeed.

What makes this particular collection interesting?

-This collection is personal and universal. Nobody wants to admit when they failed, its more common to consider finding a scape goat for a persons failures. This compilation is also intended for viewers to find comparisons towards my failures and cross reference them to theirs. This collection is very simple and common in everyday life, but is never put up for everyone too see. I want to break that wall of privacy and openly admit to the viewer of my mistakes.

• What meaning does the collection add to each object? What meaning(s) does the collection produce overall?

-Each failure alone does not express the message as well as it would as a whole. The meaning of collection is failures happen everyday, they only continue to happen over and over unless we learn from them. The only failure that a person can have from a experience is not learning from it. We must fail in order to know. these messages are my concepts.

- Do similar collection exist? What links this collection with others?

<http://a-collection-of-failures.tumblr.com/>

-I can not find a exact similar collection that I'm planning to create. The closest Ive found are threads that compile failures in life. One being ac compilation of images considered "Fails". That reflect on human errors in a humorous way. Still without having that collection be a reflection of my concept, I can reflect the same principles on the collection. The next is a collection of quotes and essays that describes failures in today's society. Once again without trying I can use my concept and view these failures in a different perspective.

How Facebook Makes Us Dumber

azspot:

A new study focusing on Facebook users provides strong evidence that the explanation is confirmation bias: people's tendency to seek out information that confirms their beliefs, and to ignore contrary information.

24 October 2015

The future is black...There's so many ways to interpret that.

How much is the MTA losing by doing construction work in Brooklyn and Queens during the weekends in the spring, summer, and fall? The construction in Manhattan was done during the winter when people weren't going out much. But to have it being done for such a long period of time in boroughs that many people live in or travel to boroughs makes little sense especially due to schools. It is as if the MTA is trapping/forcing you to stay home unless you live in Manhattan or in an area really close to the city like Long Island City or downtown Brooklyn.

Yes, the MTA does this on purpose because it cares more for affluent people who can afford not to take the rails, as evidenced by which lines are affected. Yet, people know this and do nothing about it. Construction is needed but why hasn't the MTA fixed the recurring signal problems that happen around the Jackson Heights area? Why haven't stations like the 179th Street station been repaired yet over 1 billion was spent on a brand new station that rarely gets commuters and only sees use during conventions which are rare? Do commuters, who generate a bulk of the money the MTA dishonestly earns, really need WiFi or a transit system that is reliable and actually runs when needed and not only when the MTA permits it?

Does it matter, the MTA will do whatever it wants to regardless. Perhaps people are focusing, and even protesting, the wrong things.

“I’ve missed more than 9000 shots in my career. I’ve lost almost 300 games. 26 times, I’ve been trusted to take the game winning shot and missed. I’ve failed over and over and over again in my life. And that is why I succeed.” -Michael Jordan

• How will the collection be organized on the site? By time (like blogs and Tumblrs)? By other taxonomies? Randomly?

-I plan to have the collection be organized by time. I want to website to be created in a simple and easy to use forum. Have a page in my site where they can continue to see all my failures in a reflection list. Then give the navigator their own page so they can have the opportunity to express their failures as well.

• How will the site structure re-inforce or contend with the collection?

-The collection will be structured so that new failures can be added on everyday. Also to have an emphasis on how much space there is, room to add more failures. Give the viewer a perception that this collection has no end, there is always room for growth which means there is always room for failure.

Will your site be an archive for a fixed and finite collection, or will it grow over time?

-Grow overtime, this collection can be carried over for as long as I keep making mistakes, and for as long as the viewers can interact and contribute to the list. I don't plan on being perfect for the next few years, and thats also my point, nobody is perfect everyone can admit to a mistake they made today, yesterday, or a week ago.

• Who will manage the collection? You? An institution? Public users?

-I will manage my collection on my section of the website. I do not want to have an say in what mistakes are written on the interaction portion of my website. I want my failures to be displayed as a blog. growing more and more with time and having my viewers able to view all of them. The section for the viewer to submit their comments is going to be an uncensored and unchecked section.
